

ROBARTS
CENTRE FOR CANADIAN STUDIES

7th floor York Research Tower • 416-736-5499 • www.robarts.york.ca

Transforming Canada: Histories of Environmental Change

This lecture series reconsiders the transformation of the northern half of the continent through time as a foundation for sensible engagement with the environmental challenges facing Canadian society in the twenty-first century.

Matthew Evenden, Geography, University of British Columbia

"Of muskrats and minerals: The Second World War and the Canadian environment"

Monday October 3, 2011; 11-1 pm, 305 York Lanes

Arn Keeling, Geography, and John Sandlos, History, Memorial University

"Residual landscapes: The nature of the Canadian mining industry"

Thursday October 27, 2011, 2 -4 pm, 305 York Lanes

Graeme Wynn, Geography, University of British Columbia

"Migration and the nature of Canada"

Monday December 5, 2011, 2 -4 pm, 305 York Lanes

Tina Loo, History, University of British Columbia

"How has high modernism changed the nature of Canada?"

Monday March 5, 2012, 1-3 pm, 305 York Lanes

Julie Cruikshank, Anthropology, University of British Columbia

"Indigenous knowledge and its transformations: An environmental narrative"

Monday March 12, 2012, 2-4 pm, 305 York Lanes

These talks are run in conjunction with a series at Green College, UBC. Additional support for this series comes from NiCHE (Network in Canadian History & Environment) and the UBC Canadian Studies Programme.